CHEDER CHESHEK

Your peek at how Chinuch and Cheshek go hand in hand

A Message from the Menahel

A valuable chinuch lesson in partnership and empowerment can be learned from Yaakov Avinu in this week's parshah.

After an intense confrontation with Lavan, Yaakov calls upon his children to construct a peace monument that would serve as a testimony to the treaty they declared that day.

Interestingly, when Yaakov calls to his children, he calls them "brothers."

Rashi explains that since they readily stood at his side in his time of need, Yaakov honored them with this title.

Rav Shlomo Wolbe zt"l points out Yaakov's choice of words as a lesson in building a parent-child partnership. As we allow children to shoulder responsibility, we should then recognize their contribution with honor and status in our homes. Their newfound stature motivates continued responsibility which then affords them ample opportunities to develop into fully responsible adults.

Have a wonderful Shabbos!

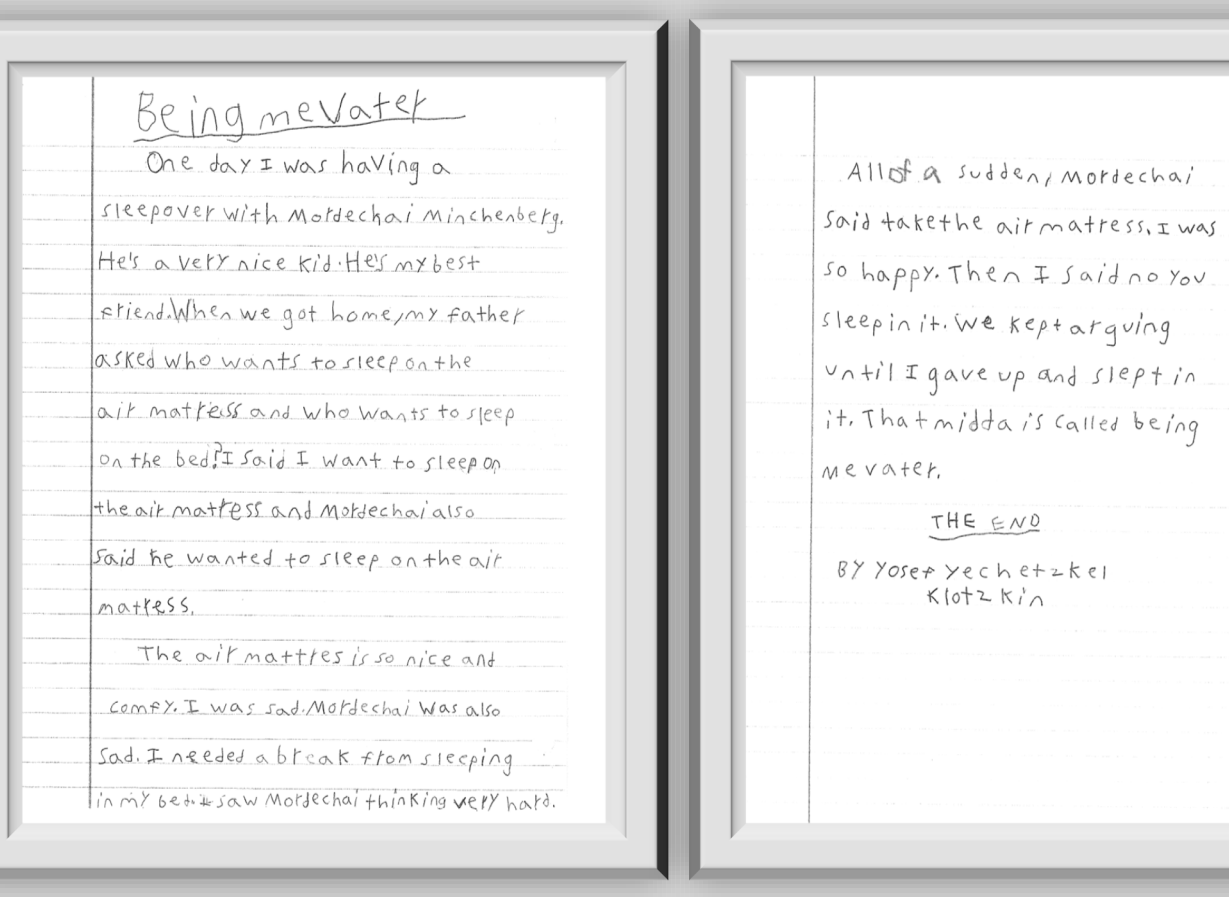
Happenings Around the Cheder

Our Maseches Yoma Mishna masters roasting marshmallows as they reflect on the coals the Kohen Gadol brought into the Kodesh Kadashim during the Avodas Yom Hakippurim. Thank you R' Selengut for making learning so fun!

Great Work!



Being mevater

One day I was having a sleepover with Mordechai Minchenberg. He's a very nice kid. He's my best friend. When we got home, my father asked who wants to sleep on the air mattress and who wants to sleep on the bed? I said I want to sleep on the air mattress and Mordechai also said he wanted to sleep on the air mattress.

The air mattres is so nice and comfy. I was sad. Mordechai was also sad. I needed a break from sleeping in my bed. I saw Mordechai thinking very hard.

All of a sudden, Mordechai said take the air matress. I was so happy. Then I said no you sleep in it. We kept arguing until I gave up and slept in it. That midda is called being mevater.
